MONDAY EVENING, AUGUST 6.

A Warning to the Giddy.

It was her first offence, and will probably be warning. Given, two young men united to two young women-one cach, of course-living at the Sherman House; men fast friends, girls ditto, with large but only partially developed flirting proclivities, and something is sure to happen. Now mark what follows. Young man No. 1, Board of Trade young man, in manner unobservable by outsiders, but palpable to in terested party (know how it is yourself,) evinces lively interest in lovely wife of young man No. 2. Lovely wife reciprocates. Hush, my hub approaches; we must conceal our love. Exit young wife by Randolph street entrance, concealing her love. Young man No. 1 mutters:

"Yes, yes, we must dissemble," and exits dissembling by Clark street front. Later, as they meet again, he passes her a billet-deux; sho presses it in an approved fashion and hastens to a secluded spot to spell out the words. Oh. what does it say? "Fly with me to my cloud clad home. "No, it says, meet me at one p. m. for lunch at St. Elmo. Visions of buckleberries and milk and contentment with him sho loves float before her enraptured gaze-also in appropriate fashion-and she hastens to accontre herself for a journey of two blocks and a half. Fifteen minutes before the hour of ap-pointment she started for the trysting place. She was attired-but details in this respect are unnecessary. Suffice it to say, she was dressed —of course—dressed in the latest style. Externally she looked charmingly placid; internally she felt awfully peturbed. A peculiar feeling-not exactly unpleasant, but somewhat exhibitating-warned her that she was going to do something naughty. Then she thought she would turn back; then she thought of the huckleberries and milk-and Harry, dear Harry, and kept on. He was to meet her at the top of the stairs, and had he done so all might have been well; but, as it turned out, they didn't get those huckleberries. He was anxious, and descending the restaurant stairway, secreted himself in a passage to await the arrival of the other fellow's wife. She reached the ladies' entrance, sped up the lower half of the stairway, past the passage, where he caught sight of her in rapid transit; then she started up the balance of the stairs; he flew up behind her and then imprudently tapped her on the shoulder. That settled it. A shrick went up from thickly veiled female like the blowing off of fourteen locomotives. Twentytwo Sepegambian waiters dropped plates of hash, and headed by restaurant proprietor, rushed to the scene, where they found astonished young man, and female so thickly veiled that she couldn't see anything murmuring that he had insulted her. He-young man No. I, Board of Trade young man-was premptly flung out, and retired to a furnishing store to get some buttens sewed on, and hysteric wife of young man No. 2 was sent home in a hack to the hostlery. Innecent and unsuspecting husband of No. 2 and ditto wile of No. 1 have been pained of late to see a growing coldness or something springing up between their families, "which have been so intimate, you know." Corresponding halves of Nos. 1 and 2 aren't surprised so much as the "other fellows." When they have to speak now they only talk on common places. As to the other thing, "Oh, no, we never mention it; the subject's never heard."—Shenandouh, Pa., Herald. A Gambling House Tragedy.

Mike Murry's up town establishment is at No. 13 West Twenty-eighth street. It is not exactly a "gilded" gambling palace, but it is Fountain Beattie, and ratified by the said Founcomfortably if not luxuriously furnished, and has a full complement of dealers, attaches, and colored servants. At 3 a.m. Friday a game of fare was at full blast in a rear parler on the first floor. The room as well as the front par for was brilliantly lighted, the gamblers, many professionals, who were staking their money on the game, were intent on the chances that were deftly dealt; a few "charmers" lounged about looking for an opportunity to secure a check or two; sundry novices were playing roulette or draw poker, and now and then a thirsty or ex-CHANGE OUR LOCATION ON THE FIRST clied gambler sauntered to the main parlor and of SEPTEMBER, WE WILL SELL OUR ENTIRE STOCK OF LADIES', MISSES' AND CHILDREN'S FINE clied gambler sauntered to the main parlor and refreshed himself at a buffet, or attacked the remnants of a bounteous supper laid out on a snowy tablecooth on a mahogany table.

Few noticed a thick set, determined-looking, well-dressed man, whose features were a pain-ALL IN WANT OF GOOD GOODS AT A ed, agitated expression, and whose immense, VERY LOW PRICE WILL DO WELL TO closely-trimmed, chony dyed mustache and imperial gave him the air of a desperado. Since midnight he had alternately looked on the gambling, abstractedly smoked, drank, and paced the main parlor. The man finally sat down in a chair against the west wall of the main parlor, near the pediment of a marble pillar. A gambler noticed him do this, and supposed he was fatigued, but a minute later a pistol shot rang out, and a crowd of alarmed gain blers, some coatless, others with checks in their hands, accompanied by Patrick Downey, Chas. Davis, J. 11. Victor and J. P. Pyles, attaches of the establishment, who had the implements of the games in their hands, rushed to where the stranger was sitting and found that he had shot himself in the right temple with a five chambered revolver of large calibre, He was bleeding s) profusely that a stream of blood poured on the chair on which he was sitting and on the Brussels carpet below. One of the dealers felt his wrist and pronounced him stone dead.

Roundsman Price was the first officer notified of the occurrence. He sent for a stretcher. and while the gamblers, who feared arrest, or did not desire to be held as witnesses, swarmed out of the house, the attaches covered up the gambling tables and turned down the gas. The body was taken to the Thirtieth street station house, and the clothing, which consisted of a fashionable blue coat, light trousers and buckled shoes, was searched. The man had in his possession an address which identified him as John Francis Murphy, a guest of the Sturtevant House, a valuable gold watch and chain, gold stude and elecve buttons, a gold scarf-pin, $1.35 in money, and a pocket book which contained a letter, dated 1872, announcing the intention of the writer to commit suicide if ill luck befell him, as he could not stand adversity.

The New York Herald says he had gambled that night until nearly three a. m., losing about $1,300, and when he had lost his last check he quietly arose from the table and stepped into Mr. Leland, the proprietor of the Sturte-vant House, said that Murphy, on Thursday,
